Simplex Component Library

A simple, flexible component library that can be used as a base for complex websites and applications. The word "simplex" comes from the Latin for "simple".

Simplex provides:

- non-opinionated styles for all HTML elements
- a series of simple and flexible utility classes
- a simple grid system
- a small set of re-usable components

Simplex uses OOCSS principles and a naming convention originally defined by BEM, then extended by Nicolas Gallagher and Harry Roberts. The Simplex code base can be accessed via GitHub.

The smartphone screen shows the mobile responsive design of the website. At the top, it displays the title "Saulwick Polls & Social Research" and a subtitle "A RESOURCE FOR EXPLORING THE WORK AND ARCHIVES OF IRVING SAULWICK (1930-2012)". Below this is a navigation bar with a dropdown menu labeled "Site navigation". Two prominent buttons are visible: "Browse the polls" and "Search the polls", each with a right-pointing arrow. To the left of the phone, there is descriptive text about the site's purpose and historical context, followed by a quote from Irving Saulwick. On the right side of the phone, there is a vertical sidebar with links to "Who was Irving Saulwick?", "Saulwick's Australian Archives", "Saulwick's UTS Melbourne Data", and "How to use this site". There are also thumbnail images corresponding to these links.

Karlkurla Gold: A History of the Women of Kalgoorlie-Boulder is a tribute to the women of Kalgoorlie-Boulder. Living in a town with a unique role in the development of Western Australia, both as a centre of mining and for its place on the edge of the Nullabor Plain, Kalgoorlie-Boulder women have made important contributions to this region, before and after white settlement.
